living with information

ARCHITECTURE AND VISUALIZATION

FH Potsdam / October 16 / 10am

Over the last three years, the MACE project developed concepts, tools and infrastructures to make digital information about architecture more accessible. An integral part of the project was the development of interactive visualizations that allow to search and browse contents about architecture in novel ways.

The workshop »Living with Information: Architecture and Visualization« (October 16, 2009 at FH Potsdam) will juxtapose experiences and results from the MACE project with thoughts and design approaches from practitioners in the fields of design, architecture and technology. Guided by five central questions, we will explore future trends in information visualization, the relationship of visualization tools and creativity plus issues like information over- and underload.

The workshop will be hosted by Prof. Boris Müller and Moritz Stefaner. Please note that all presentations and discussions will be in english.

Getting Thumbnails from Flickr

With very slight changes to the Petit3DCube, it now gets the image URL:s from a query string and the thumbnails from Flickr.

This 3D cube uses thumbnail images from my Flickr account. The image urls are hard coded in the object inclusion tag, as a "query string" attached to the FlickrSpinnr.swf. The thumbnail images are fetched from Flickr using a PHP proxy. the proxy is necessary to break out of the Flash security sand box, which doesn't allow media from another server to be manipulated. In this case we have to convert the JPEGs to bitmaps, to be able to deform them as the coube rotates. Here is the result:

Nice, or what?
Next step will be to get the URL:s from Headzoo's PHP application

An unforeseen problem showed its ugly head here. When I run the cube locally, it worked like clock work, but after uploading it to my server, the images where gone. I suspected it had something to do with the Flash security sand box. The strange thing was, that in the earlier experiment above, the SWF fetched images from Flickr and presented them without problem.

I searched high and low for a solution, and found that the only difference between the simple presentation and the cube, was that I used BitmapData to be able to deform the images as the cube rotates.

Klicken, um diese Steuerung zu aktivieren und zu benutzen.

Searching the web for an answer, gave a lot of complicated arguments, but finally I found that BitmapData.draw() is not allowed to be applied to media fetched from another server, than the one hosting the SWF. Surely a strange behavior, as the images can be readily fetched, but not worked on.

The solution was to let the Flash Movie fetch the images from flickr via a PHP proxy residing on the same server as the SWF.
